

Calvary Baptist Church sends its popular and dynamic Choir on May 9

One of Salt Lake City's most historic institutions will share its musical ambassadors at our May 9 luncheon. If this will be your first time to hear them you have an exciting treat in store.

Calvary Baptist, located at 1090 South State, was established in 1892 and celebrated its 124th anniversary last November. Also worthy of note is Calvary's notable pastor, The Reverend France A. Davis, Professor Emeritus of Communication at the U. He and church members celebrate his 43rd year as pastor this month.

All three – the church, the choir and the pastor – are part of Salt Lake City's vibrant history as many club members are aware and others will come to appreciate.

The congregation is primarily focused on spiritual well-being, but is also committed to meeting people's health, housing, employment, education, and legal needs. Its mission is to insure that each individual can reach his

2017 EMERITI TOUR: 31 August – 14 September 2017

Best of Devon & Cornwall + a Week in London

I know how much our travelers are looking forward to this wonderful trip in September with a week to do as they choose in London followed by a week exploring the West Country of Britain. We will have a pre-trip meeting some two or three weeks before departure, so that you may receive your travel documents, meet everyone, and get answers to any questions you may have. Our travel agent Monica will be in touch when we know the date, but it will almost certainly be on a Friday at 5:00pm and we will meet at Thomas Travel. Stay tuned.

Meantime if you have questions you may call or email either Michele at 801-582-2806, 1elizabethan@comcast.net; or Monica at 801-266-2775, monica@thoma-

For you closet Royalists, you may wish to know that a new exhibition of Princess Diana’s clothing has just opened at Kensington Palace. Plan accordingly!

Dr. Bentley is Professor Emeritus of Management and Organizational Behavior at the U. He spent his early years in Mexico, learning English and Spanish. Since 1967 he has resided in Salt Lake City with time living and teaching in Mexico, Venezuela, Germany, France and England. He taught at the U for more than 40 years, spending 25 years in the University's EMBA program, of which he was one of the founders. His book, "Taming Wicked Problems," is nearing publication. See www.tamingwickedproblems.com

Former Secretary of State George Schultz once drew a distinction between "problems you can solve" and "problems you can only work at."

His insight is one we can all understand. Many of the problems that come our way we can solve, while others seem to resist all efforts to find a solution.

Secy. Schultz may not have been aware of it, but these two kinds of problems have names.

EMERITI DOINGS

In 1973 two social scientists at the University of California – Berkeley published a paper in which they named those that could be solved "Tame," and those that could not "Wicked." Their intention was not to infer that wicked problems were evil, but messy, tricky, complex, and, once people tried to "solve" them, complicated.

Wicked problems are ill-defined, ambiguous, complicated situations, and because people who confront them always have different opinions, perspectives, values and preferences, are always full of conflict. And most of us don't do conflict very well. As it turns out, most of the problems we all face are wicked and not tame. They are the ones, depending on what we can do with them, that either lead to satisfaction and success or to dissatisfaction and despair.

Some examples: Raising a family, making a marriage that endures, a government that works, navigating retirement, building productive and profitable organizations, health care for all, supportive communities, effective leadership, global warming, terrorism, productive work teams and on and on. If it is a problem that we as individuals, partners, communities, and nations have struggled with over the years, we can be sure that it is wicked.

Most people have no idea the problems they are facing are so difficult because they are wicked and not tame, and so they get stuck in them because they hold unrealistic expectations – for example, they they can be solved if only enough money or experts can be found.

And when people discover that their most important problems are wicked and not tame, most are at a loss to know what to do next. Most of the time we just "muddle through"!

When it comes to the most important issues and situations we face in our lives – wicked problems – there is much to learn!"

"OUR JULIA" IS HONORED ~ Julia Kleinschmidt, Professor Emerita of Ophthalmology, received the Jeanette M. Misaka Outstanding Service Award from the Special Education Department on Wednesday, April 12. She was acknowledged for creating a globally recognized Patient Support Program for individuals and families impacted by visual impairment and blindness; for serving 25 years as a faculty member of Special Education's Multi-University Consortium which has earned worldwide attention; and for taking every opportunity to spread the word that "disabilities are doable" – with proper support, training and attitude, rewarding lives are achievable. She served for three years on the Executive Board of the Professors Emeriti Club, one year as president. Club member Jeanette Misaka is Professor Emerita of Special Education.
